What You Will Learn

Today’s organizations are fraught with challenges that can certainly inspire resourcefulness and creativity, but those same challenges are also often accompanied by anxiety, stress, and uncertainty. Courage connects to pretty much every facet of organizational performance. In this workshop participants will scrutinize the current limits of their personal courage and learn how to increase their capacity to be courageous to effectively meet those challenges with more confidence and less trepidation.

Participants will examine the three types of leadership courage, determine which they use most often, when they could be more courageous, and learn when and how to use all three. Through a personal assessment, participants will identify the situations in which they are likely to act courageously, as well as those situations in which they are likely to “play it safe.”

During interactive discussion and group exercises, participants will assess the role courage plays in key drivers of business effectiveness and reflect on personal and organizational behaviors that may be deterrents to performance.

Key Topics

- The three types of courage and how and when to use (and not to use) each
- The role courage plays in achieving personal and business effectiveness
- Courage as a key component in “right” risk taking
- The “X factors” of courageous leadership
- Opportunities to apply courage in the workplace

Who Should Attend

Leaders who have decision-making and team leadership responsibilities, particularly appropriate for mid-level, emerging, and next generation of leaders.

About the Instructor

Nicole Price understands that if leadership is anything, it is personal, and that everyone can be a great leader. So she gets personal. Nicole’s transparency allows others to learn from her mistakes and helps them avoid the same pitfalls. She gets real. She will tell you, yes, having differences within a team can be harder, but that hard work can really pay off — both professionally and personally. And she gets wise. She’ll tell you, in a heartbeat, how she’s gotten a few things wrong over the years, but a little grace and some solid coaching saved her.

Through leadership development, coaching, consulting, keynotes, and other resources, Nicole encourages and enables others to live their lives in excellence. Her energetic and engaging sessions leave participants with strategies and specific tools that they can apply right away. Her lively presentation style garners rave reviews and, very often, an invitation to return. Nicole received her B.S. in chemical engineering from North Carolina A&T University and her master’s degree in adult education from Park University.
